Vicuña Jacketings. Exquisite luxury.

Take a hike high into the Andean plains and you won't have to cast your eye far before you catch sight of a vicuña. These doe-eyed, tawny coated creatures are cousins of the llama, protected from the elements by a fleece so fine that the Incas considered it to be cloth of gold.

Scabal's brand new vicuña jacketings collection includes six luxurious designs crafted from 100% vicuña: three bold checks and three classic herringbones.

Where the first vicuña jacketings came in a simple palette of black, blue and neutral, this latest collection is finished in shades of blue, burgundy and the caramel hues of natural vicuña. Vicuña is also notoriously sensitive to colour treatments, and our process is among a select few who have successfully dyed the natural material from its golden colour, making it more versatile. This adds an even more exclusive element to such a miraculously rare fibre, and guarantees an unparalleled level of quality, not to mention luxury.

Once, it was only Incan royalty who had the privilege of wearing such finery. Thanks to Scabal, it can now be part of the modern-day gentleman's wardrobe, too.

Available from selected tailors globally from September 1st 2018.

Founded in 1938, Scabal is the world's foremost producer of luxury fabrics, supplying elite tailors and fashion houses. Scabal also crafts its own label suits, jackets and shirts in made-to-measure and prêt-à-porter, while Scabal stores that carry the apparel and accessories can be found across Europe.

Today Scabal is still family-owned and its heritage mill in England has been weaving since 1539. The brand is also unique in offering full European production in both cloth and clothing, using only the best raw materials sourced directly from suppliers, so from sheep to shop, field to fold, and camel to coat, Scabal can ensure quality.
